Look at OP's other post history...there's more to this than his car preference...

- What city is in the background?
- Why a Kharma (spelt wrong too, car is Karma)?
- Why "Wen", is there a politician/executive he is referring to?

My brain is literally mush after the last few days of reading, I need some other smart ape to dive in here.

Hmmmm - Citadel Securities, a leading global market maker, today announced the opening of its newest office in Austin, Texas. The office will serve as another research and innovation hub for the firm and will primarily accommodate its growing technology and quantitative research teams

Hao Wen - Quantitative Researcher at Citadel Securities (Also was a Summer Analyst @ Morgan Stanley)

Weak link at best

Great find ape! Not sure if it means anything or if there's any relevance but good find.

Another possibility - after watching that vid that /u/WhileNo1676 posted, it appears it's an EV. Could it be another reference to Elon? I remember one of the posts Ratio mentioned that we needed to find the link between Elon/KG/Trump/Cohen (there may have been a fifth, have it written down somewhere)

I just read an article about Ken donating $5 million to city of Miami this month to help expand wifi access for students, and remembered this comment. Interesting

So, a few potential kharma references. I think this one sounds the most interesting. Abdallah Kharma, former head of trading at China Aviation Oil, got busted for letting his option trading get out of control and then covering it up. Essentially they bet on oil prices going down in 2014, sold calls and bought puts. They lost money on these options and were also marking them to market at intrinsic value only (ignored premium for time value). Instead of closing out and taking their losses, they rolled the losses forward by going farther out in expiry and with more volume. They compounded their problems, never caught up, accumulated hundreds of mil in losses, kept getting margin calls, and they got busted.

OP - ★ or ⚡?

I know this is an old post but I have had a theory going for a while. Citadel being one of the largest options MMs in the world. They have written way to many contracts that are ITM. I believe that citadel are under hedged on their contracts. I know very little about the world of finance and how it works but it makes sense to me that if the gamma squeeze in January was going to bust them up because they were hedging that they would cease to hedge. Sell the shares to tank the price and only purchase the shares they need to deliver after exercising. This is also why I think we haven't seen much in the way of gamma squeezes since January. Prolly all gibberish to wrinkle brains.

This why price is staying at the max pain point? So options expire worthless and they don't have to pay?

"After Fisker's battery supplier A123 Systems filed for bankruptcy after two battery recalls, Fisker Automotive could not continue its business operations, and the company declared bankruptcy in February 2014 which led to the Wanxiang acquisition.[8]

Karma Automotive was formed in October 2015.[8] The purchase excluded the Fisker brand and trademarks owned by Henrik Fisker.[9] Wanxiang also purchased A123 Systems following its bankruptcy declaration.[10]"

Exactly! Every time one passes me I start daydreaming. My mom just purchased a new 4Runner and every time I see her and hear it start, I'm like 🧑 a brand new car and still can hear the engine start what a waste of money 😂

That is on my list. I'm assuming this is going to pop this year, so have to "settle" for the Model S Plaid since the roadster isn't out yet. 😊

Hells yeah! Gotta settle for the Model S Plaid this year. Roadster and Truck won't be here this year 😞. Assuming the moon launch is this year of course 😊

You know, looking at the power of "he is qanon" posts I actually believe he was up to something. But it's related to Kenny's misbehavior and changes nothing in apes moon mission, so IDGAF if Noone is looking deeper. I am, just from my curiosity. But I'm really worried about hypocrisy of superstonk subscribers
