61727054 Says Ken is Next

Fluff

I know that you know what that number relates to Ken. I know that you have a plaque in your NY office with that on it. Actually..It's known that London, Chicago, New York all have 61727-054 cleverly placed and/or referred to.

61727-054 bold move

For the longest time you've done everything possible to exceed where they failed. For years now you've shared your goals and your ambitions when it comes to Citadel. To be the biggest you've gotta slay the legend. You've never shied away from letting those around you know what your aim is..what really fuels you everyday, every account, every trade. To be the king of Wall St. Bigger and scarier than the Wolf. A legend. A myth.

...A genius. Just like xXx did it but better. They got tired and worn out. You've always considered that their weakness. They were only able to keep it going for so long, you've always felt as though you could get away with it forever.

I must admit..you've been clever. You've taken what you learned and have adapted quite well. That was until you allowed two mistakes to be made.

I didn't catch it before in 2019 when I started to peek behind the curtains and peel back the layers. But I have now and day by day so do others. Just like you...plain sight.

The more I think about it and the more research that I do into the books, I can't believe that NO ONE outside a handful of others have recognized the patterns. But that's okay..because 's are getting ever so closeclose. So many 's are on the path, they just haven't stumbled upon the right trees and bushes. Yet.

{Insert Rozay} I remember being blind to it Til the day I put my mind to it

Computer Science at a certain uni.. 😳🧐🤔

jUsT me babooning but word on Sixth St. is that your frienemies on Congress Ave. are running out of leverage when it comes to that quiet little office in Austin.

Just a matter of tick tocks 'til the real show begins Ken. What's your move then?

It's a Ponzi scheme of shares. Boring from one to pay the other writing naked shares to cover x paying with y. It's been in the open the entire time. Shifting a to b, c to d rinse repeat. This entire thing is a share fucked circle. We keep buying stock because mostly it's just being printed like money. The money is used to short, which is shuffled like buckets.

The glitch isn't a glitch.

I wonder if there's any tie to this 😬😬 <https://www.texasmonthly.com/news-politics/solarwinds-austin-russian-government-hackers/>

Massive security breach (in Austin) affecting several government agencies and the vast majority of Fortune 500 companies.

It was naturally blamed on "The Russians" but...?

Could this have uncovered some dirty little secrets?

Put together pieces all night. You can start to connect issue with issue and markets not correlation to realistic circumstances doesn't add up. True it's not 100% written out, but as the past 12ish hours things have gotten more spicy and shit is being uncovered. If it's true which I suspect it is, this would be madof plus big short together. Which these elites are the crazy about being the top. The best, the richest, I can see it being true.

Now this wouldn't surprise me if this isn't an ape but a person at a firm. Hell it could be rc letting us know what's up. I don't care it doesn't change my mind to hold but it does make More sense why nothing has made sense.

You should NOT just believe something because it appears to have depth.

I Voted

The excuse I've always heard to justify naked shorting is.. "Banks give businesses loans, businesses give that same money out as loans from cash flow to other businesses in exchange for products/services/investments, etc.

That analogy is a hunk of crap.

My version it's more like a library than the business cash flow example. The library is the market, the rows of the library the sectors, shelves would be companies and books shares. Sometimes the library gets more books in (shares added, new IPO, etc)

Here's where it gets interesting.. since there's a unique barcode ID on each book to keep track of the book's location, a librarian (DTCC) could always track down those books and contact the last person responsible and hold them accountable (and we all know how serious an offense this is :)) Needless to say, a library card holder, let's call him Fuk(hedge funds, MMs) comes along and checks out a book at no cost to him, in fact, the librarian even gives him a complimentary bookmark. (This is where reality ends, we said screw the barcodes in real life)

Now, Fuk has a bunch of clown friends :) who want books, but don't have library cards. Fuk decides to lend the book to these one of the clown friends who doesn't have a library card but takes on a big risk by doing so, because he knows his friends are all clumsy clowns too, and lose these things all the time. Fuk, who has a trust fund justifies this apparent risk by telling himself he will be greedy and charge each of his clowns who doesn't have access to the library $1 to rent this, let's call it a $183.00 valued, book from him. Even though Fuk doesn't need the money because he's rich.

This goes great for a couple months in fact, he's checking out more books than anyone else in the whole friggin town. Fuk becomes cool with the librarian who sees he is learning a lot, and reading all these books, so she lets Fuk start to take out 30 books at a time now because he's shown a responsible track record and Fuk definitely doesn't want to get off his fat ass up to go to the library more than he has to.

One day Fuk decides to check out 30 books belonging to a limited edition set, where the only other backup copy is held by the author. Of course, Fuk lends these to his clown friends, who actually end up burning all the books doing clown stuff. Fuk keeps $30 premium and his greedy ass even kept all the bookmarks, which he sold for $5 total on Craigslist. Fuk is counting his dough when his clown buddies come crying and saying they lost all the books!! While panic ensues, a few smooth-brained apes who were firing off rocket emojis overhear this malarky and realize the deep fukin value of buying the only copy of the series left from the author.

Some time goes by, and Fuk doesn't do shit except start freaking out about how bad he did himself in this time because those were actually $100 a piece for the library to buy, not $30 like other books. The librarian trusts Fuk and doesn't "call" (see what I did there?) Fuk about the books for weeks. As time goes on more and more people are asking about this book because the author is completely reforming their writing style to e-commerce and the old collection is now a hot collector's item. The apes hold onto the books as the hype grows, and people at the library start requesting these books and the librarian finally has so much pressure on her to get them, that she finally issues a written notice to Fuk saying:

"I hear you saying you still have the books, BUT.. if you don't have those books by a certain time when they are needed.. You're on the hook to pay for them, not us. Ok byyyeee"

Fuk's Mom (SEC) overhears that he Fukd up, and demands that Fuk pays for the books out of his trust fund or he's grounded and can't go to the library anymore.

with gov Abbot of Texas(A UT grad, is this your alumni reference?) back in November to talk about moving the DATA CENTERS FOR THE FUCKING EXCHANGES THERE?

Isn't citadel the biggest market maker for the NYSE?

Isn't Goldman also located on that street? Didn't they just liquidate 10 billion in block trades?

Why might we want to move the data centers?(aside from the obvious tax related reasons)

324 Give Award Share Report Save

Watcher-of-the-wall · 2m

Hijacking my own comment to manage my thoughts, If any of you see this and want to jump down this rabbit hole by all means.

The gov. of NJ (the location of many major exchanges data centers) is Phil Murphy.

Phil Murphy is seriously considering a tax on trades which would net them 10 billion annually. In order to escape this tax, many exchanges are demonstrating their ability to move to other locations.

They recently met with gov. of Texas who is a UT grad, and op mentions alumni networks, and UT was investigated for COVID reasons.

Back to Murphy. Murphy is an ex-Goldman Sachs executive -possible connection During his time there he was president of Goldman Sachs Asia in Hong Kong, and his state was hit particularly hard by COVID, this is why he says he wants to consider the tax.

Could these hedge funds have been cooking the books during the chaos and lightened regulation/concern during COVID and plan on fudging all the numbers during the movement of the data centers and making it all disappear?

I could be absolutely crazy people this thread has me feeling some type of way.

OP - is the implication that:

- Citadel is colluding with others to hide fraudulent transactions in their normal operations
- Madoff had legitimate brokerage arm of his firm (citation please), in addition to the Ponzi scheme. This made it harder to detect and gave it an air of legitimacy.

Chat

Search

- ...but instead of a normal Ponzi scheme where disbursements which eat away at capital...
- Citadel has a more sophisticated scheme (albeit relatedly structured) involving shorts, FTDs, and moving capital around to make their assets and positions appear larger than they materially are.
- OP is implying Ken made 2 mistakes: 1 in relation to Austin, TX; the other of a cyclical nature that a few apes have mentioned but haven't caught wider attention yet
- Moving operations to Austin (or having a datacenter there) is disadvantageous in the field of nanosecond trading; NYSE is a preferred base of operations...
- ...but the reason for moving to Texas might be one of the "tells" of the crime - less aggressive or knowledgeable prosecutors (NY has robust financial policing in place, TX less so; TX also has an AG under serious investigation for corruption), but under the guise of lower taxes.
- The cyclical crime is the meat of OP's comments however, and they imply that it's ongoing.
- Operations (especially ongoing ones) in finance need data centers, the kind that Citadel has in Austin.
- Several other competitors that are "in on the fix" have data centers in the same location...
- ...the kind of record keeping that you can't make go away. There is evidence there. Most likely evidence of some "original sin" (2019 per OP's post) - but also something related to ongoing cycles, a dead giveaway just like a Ponzi scheme has a dead giveaway in their portfolio or RoR.
- But for Citadel & co-conspirators, executing this scheme requires leverage and/or a base amount of cash for all parties to keep playing. But that leverage looks like it's drying up...

OP - is this the framework? I can speculate additional details on confirmation.

Also per your TX comment, do we know if the major snowstorm also might have affected those data centers? Or if any news related to the big snow event might have showed itself in how data was processed around that time? I know there was talk about nicer neighborhoods being fine, but wonder if any noticeable change in trading/algorithms then too in the markets

From other comments, the cyclical crime seems to have something to do with ETF creation and redemption mechanics. Perhaps the abuse of them to create naked shares to short?

Share

kyune · 2m

That's the beauty of it--if someone is colluding with Citadel, then in theory they don't even have to create shares because they can just pass the same shares back and forth in a loop through some combination of ETFs and market functionality that either fixes the price or results in a zero (or near-zero) sum exchange as the shares are returned to Citadel for more shorting. Citadel is so over-leveraged that they need to stop the bleeding as fast as possible--they may be at the point where they are less concerned about making money and more about stopping the bleed.

Assuming that this is the case, Citadel folds if either they:

- Get margin called because they're bleeding interest on their original short positions for which they are cycling FTDs
- Are unable to continue the cycle because available shares dry up due to apes and longs buying and holding. In this case, they could get margin called intraday if a catalyst pushes the price high enough.

Disregarding the trail apes are on to uncover the truth,

Is it possible that HF's and such are so over-leveraged that when the temp changes to SLR expire on 3/31, they come up negative post-catalyst/margin call?

Could the SEC and DTC, who have been trying to cover their own asses + possible collusion through connections with HF's, also not be able to front the cost of how negative HF positions are?

could 2000% SI and 10m floor be a meme compared to how high GME can really go if we all ? Are we going to get paid out in IOUs???

A few names that come to mind are Ivan Boesky, Michael Milken, and the investment bank Drexel Burnham Lambert. Boesky was busted for insider trading as he would buy a stake in a company that was on the verge of a merger or acquisition, and sell once the announcement caused the stock to rise. He was labeled a market manipulator and collaborated with Milken and his investment bank, Drexel Burnham Lambert. Milken was the junk bond king and would use these junk bonds to finance M&A's. Essentially they would prepare an M&A, get in early, announce, and sell when the price spiked while also making money on the bond fees. When it all came tumbling down the Insider Trading Act of 1988 was passed.

Chat

know he's definitely capable of issuing junk bonds. I remember a while back another ape pointing out a connection between him and the exited CFO of GME, Jim Bell. I can't find the link to the original post so if I do I will link it. For being a CFO, Jim isn't very good at managing finances and has a back for being in the seat come bankruptcy time. Coldwater Creek - Bankrupt 2014. P.F. Chang's - basically bankrupt and sold to investment firms 2019. Then come GME, sure fire for bankruptcy. Seems like Kenny and Jim are doing the reverse of Boesky and Milken. Find a target, short the shit out of it, install an insider to ensure it's collapse, collect tax free profits and golden parachutes. All out in the open.

How does this tie back to UT, no clue. Not even sure if I'm on the right thought path. I'll leave that to an ape with an actual wrinkle in their brain. Mine is as smooth as an egg. So I'm going to get back to polishing it and snorting crayons.

Okay I might have something

.. A genius. Just like x X x did it but better

What is "AX"?

What is the Ax?

The ax is the market maker who is most central to the price action of a specific security across tradable exchanges. The ax can be identified by studying Level II quotes and noting which market maker seems to have the greatest effect on the security's price. The term ax is sometimes applied to analysts who are especially influential in their calls on companies they cover, but this is a less defined usage of the term.

OP makes it sound like Kenny G is jealous of another MM with skin in the game. Maybe Blackrock? Someone who tried to short a company but failed because they couldn't last long enough.

Reminds me a lot of Blackrock shorting Tesla

Here's another smaller one:

To be the king of Wall St. Bigger

Also says "To be the king of WSB"

If so what does that make...

Scarier than "WAA?"

support for the security. These actions could influence both the spot and futures market for that security. The same strategy can be used to create artificial selling pressure on a stock by placing a large limit sell order that's slightly higher than the current price."

The glitches.

101 Share ...

Ksquared1166 · 2m · edited 2m

Before that: "Market makers can be identified using short codes that appear on Level II quotes. By using these codes, traders can determine what companies are behind what trades. For example, BATS refers to BATS Global Markets, which is owned by Cboe Global Markets. In general, traders should keep an eye on how many shares the market maker shows as available, how many they actually sell, the bid-ask spreads, and how quickly the market maker permits the stock to move in either direction. These dynamics can quickly paint a picture as to what market maker tends to actually have the most influence over a security."

Could it mean that the long whale is letting us know who they are or some hints to what is happening behind the scenes. Or the price that they are shooting for for max pain? I don't know how to use TOS at all, but is there a way for me to look at the exchange being used for these "glitch" orders? Maybe there is a trail under our noses and we just need to get the last few steps.

Feb 22nd there was a huge order at $46, and March 23 (?) for $182 and the price hovered around those prices. But for the Feb 22, the week didn't end near $46, so I don't think the max pain theory holds up.

Interesting that you used BATS as your example. Eric Swanson, husband of Shana Madoff, is currently a Senior VP. Swanson was with the SEC in the aughts and investigated Madoff's firm in 2006, ultimately concluding everything was tip-top.

From the post highlighting the links between BlackRock, RC and Citadel. I'd guess RC joining the board of a failing overshorted GameStop and potentially making some big investor a ton of money and crushing their rival.....isn't a happenstance.

BlackRock knew citadel was over shorted in GameStop, they saw a chance not just for revenge, but elimination. Called on RC to come in and turn the company around.

wild idea.

as was found out weeks earlier - rh did not have all (or even any) gme shares in their account - but delegated the management of all shares (buy/sell) to their broker and only money was really transferred.

that means broker can do pretty much everything unless rh client is selling. and this could mean, that a lot of shares from rh (and maybe others) never hit the market in reality.

this could explain, why the buying of retail is not changing the price as expected. because all the buying is aggregated in a pool of a broker and only hits the market when the broker benefits from it.

if this is true the broker (or whoever) was able to „create“ shares himself, because there was only money involved.

if the marketprice is low - like it was for gme in december - this pretty much does not matter, because the involved money is not a lot - but if the price suddenly rises and a lot of people start to sell, they are getting issues because they need so much money they need to cough up, without having (not even naked) paper to sell on the market. so they need to „find“ this money through „investments“ - good explanation also, why rh got B$ as an investment in january and the broker sold a bond lately.

if they used all the (rh) money to short gme in real and got caught in a beartrap - it is the perfect moment, when the whole mechanism collapses. no gains on the market from their shorting activities and a gigantic amount of money to deliver, because people sold during the first „squeeze“.

if this case is somewhat true, they took all the money from retail, which thought to be long in gme, but did not buy any paper for it and instead used it to short the stock.

Think you're spot on, I think that was brought up in a DD, on how if going through RH, and you bought a share, citadel would sell a share they already owned instead of you buying it on the open market, thus surprising buy pressure, but sell pressure still is at play to bring price down

2. This is so much bigger than a few stocks or a margin call.

That's why all this DD on technicals and timing are like throwing darts at a wall. There are too many variables that people will never see.

In summer 2008, the market was weird. It had been in weird for 2.5 years at that point, coming from a shorted and destroyed public home builder IR team, to managing a mega cap retail company IR department. But July and Aug 2008 felt different. More trading and movement than a typical summer. Lots more incoming calls than usual.

A week before Lehman and Bear collapsed, the analysts covering us had to let go of most their teams. The day they fell, they were walked out of their offices. A few months later BAML fired their entire San Francisco equity and research office. Our analyst was skiing with his kids and was fired on the chairlift. No bonus nothing. Never even got to go back to his office. They couriered his belongings.

Stocks fell and skidded, and then tumbled some more. To give you an idea C was at $1.30, SBUX was at $7.50, MSFT was at $14, DOW was at $6. Everyone was dumping everything they had. The more they sold and liquidated, the more it declined. Smart people with a little stomach and grit started to buy these deep discounts. They bought and held. It did not recover overnight. It took some stocks longer than others. None of it was based on fundamentals. It was based on fear and economic collapse and wealth transfer from the middle class that pumps discretionary spending into the economy to the wealthy and the connected that doesn't.

Ask yourself this, how in a pandemic when everything was closed are major companies in nearly every sector at 52-week highs?

Valuation? Future Earnings when many companies have pulled back on guidance given the uncertainty? Nope no possible way.

Offsetting hedges on short positions? Maybe. It makes far more logical sense. I follow a basket of about 60 stocks I know extremely well over a breadth of sectors and sizes. The only ones not near their 52-week or even 104-week high are massively shorted stocks. That go up and down and then list along.

All the DD in the world will never account for the stuff quietly underway through our entangled financial system.

Just buy and hodl. That is the retail investor influence. It is the easiest role. Patience.

Edit: Adding clarification and a reminder the type of bottom feeders we are dealing with. Why was the no bonus a big deal? Because salaries are typically only a small portion of analyst wages. The super majority of their compensation is paid in their bonus based on metrics met throughout the previous year...paid out at the end of the year. BAML closed the office as a RIF two days before the bonus pay out to avoid paying it, while collecting their bailout hand out from the government.

Who is buying these massive home starts numbers and qualifying for mortgages?

Who is buying planes from Boeing and where are the airlines flying that warrants stock prices higher than pre-covid?

How are restaurant chains that were ordered closed for most of 2020 trading at 10 year highs?

184 Share ...

Dry_Word_7545 · 2m

I've been scratching my head as well. Equity markets like stability and typically sell off when risk and uncertainty is elevated.

If you were assessing the state of our world today, would most people say that things are pretty stable or uncertain?

I think the answer is pretty obvious, so why then are markets setting historical highs?

Something has been off for several months and it feels like it's almost time for the piper to be paid.

In the meantime I'm clutching my GME with . Let's see what happens.

I wonder if the gamble was right but the premiums were wrong. There's still a huge amount of public debt globally that's going to crystallise at some point

Its like if Burrys bet in 08 hadnt come good in 5 years it would have been game over and the contracts void. They perhaps aren't wrong, just early.

the clock back to something like 5-6 years minimum before the debt crystallises - which gives time for society to restructure and possibly tackle the debt.

So now the premiums (short interest) are too high and the margin call is looming. The question is how much leverage was used in making these bets and how far does the rabbit hole go? How much was borrowed to short the economy that's now never going to get paid back?

30 Share Tip

throwawaylurker012 · 2m

Buckle up

True on global debt. There are also international banks considered either our friendly or unfriendly whales like UBS (that doesn't get anywhere as much cover here as Citadel let's say)

True Burry woulda been burned on premiums. And yeah I recall from binging the covid subreddits the timeline was loooong. The fact that we are 1 yr later in the US w nearly 100 vaccinations is way beyond what woulda been expected as far as vaccine creation

From other comments here, the borrowing must have been a metric shit ton. And it's a shell game where something goes here disappears there

Think about how many Covid loans were apportioned by the US gvt as well with no tracing?! In fact I think Treasury Secretary Mnuchin refused to have a public means of tracking where the money went

Plus we also have former Senators Loeffler and Purde (and current senator Feinstein) that made stock trades after being informed of the pandemic. Plus we have Loeffler's husband as head of NYSE IIRC

Not only that but there was a comment around in this subreddit that naked shorting was rampant in 08 as well, and maybe ppl shorted (puts?) several parts of the economy on the way down once they knew the music was stopping. That coulda happened last year too post Covid

So using that context of data backup of transactions etc. The Texas Capitol Building along with the Supreme Court of Texas can be found on Congress ave. So if I'm understanding correctly, Shitadel has been buying off (paying) Texas legislation, for what? I'm not sure exactly. The transactions and who is getting paid off can be found in this data center. An alumni from UT discovered this information because they still had access to Shitadel systems. If my inference is correct we are talking MAJOR levels of corruption here. Fuck a short squeeze, this has the makings to be much bigger than a couple HF's going insolvent. 😳

If it isn't that, the only thing I found that connects Shitadel to the rest of Congress ave is the fact that Morgan Stanley is located there. After the liquidation of Archegos on Friday, it's clear that they needed cash and fast. The only thing that would make sense is that both Shitadel and MS have some form of back door avenue of supporting each other financially. This data center could be where records of such manipulation are being kept. It would make sense as to why they would want to keep the Austin office out of the public eye persay, at least when compared to their other branch locations.

Ken Griffin has been very vocal (*third-biggest individual GOP donor last election) and has actively been fighting potential changes in Chicago tax law. "Texas and other states have made compelling pitches for businesses — like Citadel — to leave Illinois,"

We have been talking about GME and Texas Law regarding a share recall. Could it be connected where Shitadel is trying to pay off people to ensure they try and slow down the recall? Gamestop's headquarters are also in Texas...

OP can we get a hint on the computer lab significance in this? I can't picture what would be in there or how this looks.

Edit: I think this is about the books. OP states there are 2 clues. He picked up on something in 2019 and also has been "looking into the books." It's like Ken left a breadcrumb trail of something either in 2019, in the books, or in the UT lab that OP eludes to getting access to.

He read the books but there is a ut citadel computer lab. I think he got access to a terminal and saw what was happening and what wasn't. Madolf lied about all his trades. If citadel is as well, they might be running out of cash, which caused madolf to flip. The accusation is money comes in for stocks or whatever naked stocks are returned. Juggle shit around between places to cover.

Shitadel are partners with the UoT Austin Computer Science department!

I think what is happening is someone there has access to Shitadel data through a terminal or similar that they shouldn't quite have access to - or it was hoped they wouldn't know what they were looking at even if they did.

💎 10k, 69k, 100k, 420k DCA out

Balloon is a location pin like google maps, puzzle piece is obvious, magnifier means look closer.

So in this case I interpret that as look more closely into the connections between the UT Lab and Citadel, either regarding connecting people, leaking information or money changing hands.

Eg maybe someone who worked or trained in the lab was involved in building unofficial or illegal data system connections between organizations that somehow lets them cheat the system or hide information.

Physical proximity between the organizations might also be a factor somehow in this system, or having the data in a certain US state might mean they can exploit some regulatory loophole.

That was my thinking, yes. Kind of a shot in the dark, but links exist from the CS departments research page to UT's finance library which advertises the "Capital IQ" system for grad students. I single out this resource because they seem to be emphasizing remote access accounts for all students due to covid (as alluded to by OP).

Would they host what appears to be a global S&P database in Austin, though?

Could be both communication and transaction records, especially if they're all marked with the trader's codes.

If purchases and sales can be netted together for the sake of transaction processing (Alexis Goldstein mentioned this in the hearing the other day), then the public data might technically be accurate, but not precise i.e. it doesn't tell us what actually happened in a given day, especially for orders that are not transparent.

But if Citadel's records are more precise (i.e. they talk about exactly who and where their shares went to/from, as well as amounts of $$ involved), in theory it could prove who has been trying to help them bail water out of their ship and help explain the methods that shorts are using to keep the shorted volume so high.

ETF manipulation-

"They then picked the best-performing stocks and used them to create bogus "baskets" of stocks as the basis for false trading records, which Madoff claimed were generated from his supposed "split-strike conversion" strategy, in which he bought blue-chip stocks and took options contracts on them."

I read somewhere a while back that market makers were allowed to substitute a cash balance for NAV if they couldn't find underlying asset. Would make sense if instead of locating GME, throw a little cash in there, and you've flooded the supply with fake shares which was just cash.

"An authorized participant that purchases a creation unit of ETF shares directly from the ETF deposits with the ETF a "basket" of securities and other assets identified by the ETF that day, and then receives the creation unit of ETF shares in return for those assets. The basket is generally representative of the ETF's portfolio, and together with a cash balancing amount, it is equal in value to the aggregate net asset value ("NAV") of the ETF shares in the creation unit. After purchasing a creation unit, the authorized participant may hold the individual ETF shares, or sell some or all of them in secondary market transactions. Investors then purchase individual ETF shares in the secondary market. The redemption process is the reverse of the purchase process: the authorized participant redeems a creation unit of ETF shares for a basket of securities and other assets.

- The basket might not reflect a pro rata slice of an ETF's portfolio holdings. Subject to the terms of the applicable exemptive relief, an ETF may substitute other securities or cash in the basket for some (or all) of the ETF's portfolio holdings. Restrictions related to flexibility in baskets have varied over time. See infra section II.C.4.c.*

kyune · 2m · edited 2m

Where can I read more about this? I'd like to try to find out more since this section suggests that individual shares could enter a closed cycle that allows shorts to acquire shares to sell without a borrower/lender relationship or a market force to drive the price back up.

1. Get shares of GME from ETF (redemption)
2. Short GME (ideally rebought by the ETF that released the share)
3. Purchase creation units using "cash balancing amounts" to make up the differences as necessary
4. Go back to step 1

GME and the ETF price is suppressed by the shorting, the ETF does not have a portfolio imbalance, and the short-seller continues to acquire shares to push the price down without a chain of obligation--all of this could continue as long as the custodians of the ETF are willing to be part of those trades.

EDIT: Adding to this with a bit of tinfoil-if the parties are all connected, what would stop them from colluding to target particular stocks for short-selling? One side informs the other they're going to initiate a short position, the other side facilitates the free flow of shares to the short-seller and the action continues until a "safe" target is hit, and the desired amount of $$ is extracted from the entire operation. Supposinna this activity could be performed without ETFs, I wouldn't be surprised if Chat

Hmmm I wonder if this could be tied to the fact that citadel is the MM for RH. What kind of 'bigger' ponzi scheme would citadel be capable of pulling off from that position. We know they have been creating shit tons of phantom shares with naked shorting...could this go even deeper? Maybe they aren't actually executing trades coming out of RH, or something along those lines.

Someone had said they may be using dark pools to throttle trade volume. I don't know enough about anything to confirm but it sounds shady enough...

Price is high? "Sell" the ape their shares and hold the transaction in a dark pool to either execute later at a lower price, or to throttle buys and alleviate current upward pressure.

Sounds fucky enough to be in the hedgies' playbook.

Another thing discussed by a redditor some time back was that what if free shares given by RH were all naked/synthetic shares and that's why their free?

And it coulda been blindly out in the open like that

▲ 11 ▼ Share ▲ Tip

KirKCam99 · 2m · edited 2m

wild idea.

as was found out weeks earlier - rh did not have all (or even any) gme shares in their account - but delegated the management of all shares (buy/sell) to their broker and only money was really transferred.

that means broker can do pretty much everything unless rh client is selling. and this could mean, that a lot of shares from rh (and maybe others) never hit the market in reality.

this could explain, why the buying of retail is not changing the price as expected. because all the buying is aggregated in a pool of a broker and only hits the market when the broker benefits from it.

if this is true the broker (or whoever) was able to „create“ shares himself, because there was only money involved.

if the marketprice is low - like it was for gme in december - this pretty much does not matter, because the involved money is not a lot - but if the price suddenly rises and a lot of people start to sell, they are getting issues because they need so much money they need to cough up, without having (not even naked) paper to sell on the market. so they need to „find“ this money through „investments“ - good explanation also, why rh got B$ as an investment in january and the broker sold a bond lately.

if they used all the (rh) money to short gme in real and got caught in a beartrap - it is the perfect moment, when the whole mechanism collapses. no gains on the market from their shorting activities and a gigantic amount of money to deliver, because people sold during the first „squeeze“.

if this case is somewhat true, they took all the money from retail, which thought to be long in gme, but did not buy any paper for it and instead used it to short the stock.

all this would not touch the market at all, because there is no paper involved and it would not be found out as long the price stays low.

Dunno if its anything but i googled smartest man on wall street, and a bunch of articles came up about Larry Fink. (I'm a dumb ape dont really know who that is) But they call him the man behind the curtain. <https://www.vanityfair.com/news/2010/04/fink-201004> What did op say about curtains, he peeked behind them

Larry Fink is the CEO of BlackRock. World's largest asset manager, third largest GME shareholder (behind Fidelity and RC.) They were tapped by the US government in 2008 to manage the debt settlement of Bear Sterns and AIG, and again in 2020 they were chosen by the Federal Reserve to manage bond-buying programs in response to the pandemic.

There has been a lot of speculation about BlackRock's role in the GME saga, some saying they're in cahoots with Citadel, others saying they're trying to bankrupt Citadel. I'm just starting down the rabbit hole, but I think there's something to the curtain comment referring to BlackRock.

inDeVitable · 2m

I was going to say something along the same lines of that but I thought it was too far fetched but after reading your comment, what I had typed up didn't seem as dumb. So here is the unfinished draft I had that I will finish now lol

This may be a stretch here but in op post he said, "Peeking behind the curtains to pull back the layers."

In this article about Larry Fink (CEO of BlackRock) a guy (William D. Cohan) referred to Larry Fink as The man behind the curtain."

{ "If Larry Fink is currently "at the hub of the wheel of American capitalism," as his friend Ken Langone, the co-founder of Home Depot and a former director of the New York Stock Exchange, puts it, he has achieved this position largely in the shadows. Even on Wall Street, until recently, there were people who only vaguely knew what he did. According to William D. Cohan, a former investment banker and the author of the best-selling account of Bear Stearns's collapse, House of Cards, there were many bankers at the firm who for months had no idea how deeply Fink and BlackRock were involved in the dismantling of their company. "He's like the Wizard of Oz," Cohan says. "The man behind the curtain.""}

Also I noticed that "617" is the area code for Phone numbers for Boston and BlackRock has an office in Boston And also Larry Fink's first job on Wall Street was with a firm called First Boston.

Even if the above was nonsense, BlackRock is a big shareholder in GME nonetheless.

Looking at Citadel's statement of financial condition in 2019 they've got liabilities for securities sold, but not yet purchased (sold short) of $25B, but they only have cash of $438M on the books. So how would they ever be able to fund the future purchase of those securities sold short? They wouldn't be able to. It's a revolving door of short selling..

Edit: 2020 resulted in a massive uptick in short selling for Citadel, bumping that number up to $57.5B

This leads me to believe that payment for order flow isn't necessarily to front-run trades...Bernie Madoff said that he saw payment for order flow as a normal business practice. Why? Because you need to keep the revolving door spinning. Citadel has to pay for order flow to ensure they have enough money/orders coming their way to keep the revolving door spinning and ensure that the cash never dries up

I agree. The 3 stars also indicates to me that the idea is not fully complete, as he's given 4 on other comments. There's something we're missing.

Morgan Stanley's hands are just as dirty in this with about $22B in stocks that they own, yet over $48B sold short. I feel as though there may be a connection that we're missing between the two

I believe this is where Citadel's use of PFOF comes into play. If you have funding from different clients, you don't need to worry about what's on the books if you can 1) be a MM, 2) use funding that isn't yours like Madoff did. That's what PFOF allows you to do.

You can "leverage" free money by being an Execution service. The Ponzi Scheme is the thought that you're allowing Citadel to manage your funds as you intend them to promise, yet on the books they don't actually occur. This was the EXACT issue with Bernie Madoff.

Really? Worth going further down that rabbit hole... another interesting connection I just found.

OP says the 'it's known that London, Chicago, New York all have cleverly place/ and or referred to 61727-054. We've since found that means Bernie Madoff.... so Ponzi scheme and the 'cleverly placed' are people.

After searching Linked In Profiles for these offices... see if anything stood out I found this article from 2010.

<https://www.propublica.org/article/all-the-magnetar-trade-how-one-hedge-fund-helped-keep-the-housing-bubble> In summary a hedge fund in 2008 called Magnetar received outsized returns the year the crisis began... no one knew how, but a small group of insiders... now referred to as 'Magnetar Trade'. Magnetar used equity to fund shorts.

Quote: "According to bankers and others involved, the Magnetar Trade worked this way: The hedge fund bought the riskiest portion of a kind of securities known as collateralized debt obligations -- CDOs. If housing prices kept rising, this would provide a solid return for many years. But that's not what hedge funds are after. They want outsized gains, the sooner the better, and Magnetar set itself up for a huge win: It placed bets that portions of its own deals would fail."

And the founder of Magnetar was none other than Alec Litowitz - a freshly retired executive who'd spent his career working for Citadel.

The fuckery goes back to at least 2008.

OP confirmed closeclose = SEC lose. We're zeroing in on OP accessing a data cloud and possibly finding transaction history.

Also, OP hinted at something sketchy about 14 billion in federal university aid and 1 billion of it going to Texas schools which is not the fair relative amount they should get. This would mean someone at UT pocketed part of that money.

OP, is there a transaction history directly connecting citadel to the SEC as a form of bribery?
Also, is there a direct link of any UT higher up that suddenly made a big purchase shortly after the school system received federal aid?

I bet there is a direct data line between buildings that just so happens to be accessible to a terminal at UT. That's where the "hidden" transactions are being made. It's how they are able to buy back stock without affecting the market AND without anyone else knowing about it.

Reposting my daily thread comment

"In his guilty plea, Madoff admitted that he hadn't actually traded since the early 1990s, and all of his returns since then had been fabricated.[42] However, David Sheehan, principal investigator for trustee Irving Picard, believes the wealth management arm of Madoff's business had been a fraud from the start.[43] Madoff's operation differed from a typical Ponzi scheme. While most Ponzi schemes are based on nonexistent businesses, Madoff's brokerage operation arm was very real. At the time of its shuttering, it handled large trades for institutional investors."

Wait, is that post implying that the gains for Citadels investment are made up but covered by the volume of trades Citadel does?

Because this "In 1998, Citadel started requiring investors to accept terms that "significantly restrict[ed] their ability to withdraw their capital," from the Citadel's wikipedia p^a Chat the DOD payout rule, a federal law requiring private foundations to pay out 5% of their funds each year, allowed Madoff's Ponzi scheme to go undetected for a long period since he managed money mainly for charities. Zuckoff notes, "For every $1 billion in foundation investment, Madoff was effectively on the hook for about $50 million in withdrawals a year. If he was not making real investments, at that rate the principal would last 20 years." From the "Madoff Investment Scandal" wikipedia page.

Search

Probably not but I'm stoned and bored and this was a fun rabbit hole.

Edit: thinking about this more. If this is what that post is implying. It's that 1) its hard to remove your money. 2) Low payout per year. 1+2 means its easy to lie to clients about the returns. Madoff collapsed because the downturn of the economy in 2008 meant that investors wanted to pull money out of the market and he got caught with his pants down. Make it impossible to pull money out and you eliminate that problem.

And that's way different than my original thought reading it. My brain jumped to Office Space-ing it and adding percentages of a penny to each trade and skimming it.

Piggy backing on this.

- KG has been very vocal about changes to IL tax laws.
- Morgan Stanley liquidated tf out of Archegos because they needed money and quick. Maybe a back door channel between Citadel and MS. The cloud storage would potentially have records of these transactions.
- potentially influencing law changes by paying off legislators. The Capitol building and Supreme Court are also located on Congress ave.
- there is a mole that leaked these findings, to whom? We don't know. But they were an alumni at UT that likely interned at citadel. OP may or may not have more information regarding that. The timing is interesting however because we were just informed that there was a whistleblower. Could it be this UT alum?
- UT was also investigated for its connection to the lab in Wuhan where covid started
- higher ups from UT were caught pocketing money that was meant to go to the school
- Kenny G was trying to move his data servers to Texas to avoid the taxes he pays in NJ
- Ponzi scheme that makes Madoff look like a chump. Possibly paying off legislators and the SEC
- the whistleblower is tied to Kenny g and this situation
- Margin calls are coming, and soon!

Will be updating this comment as we draw more speculative conclusions

Ponzi scheme, KG never really had any of the money he claimed he did. He was just moving numbers around to give the appearance that he was running a legit operation. If he had frenimes on legislation, they probably had some sort of symbiotic relationship. He would let the legislators in on insider trading secrets, in exchange they would protect him from any heat he may receive. It may be why the sec has been so hands off with this whole thing. Explains why he had like 5 lawyers during the first hearing as well. I think OP got a look at the real books, not the fabricated bullshit that gets self reported. That's my thought process. Wait a fucking minute. I don't think Kenny G has been lobbying Congress or legislators. Maybe a couple. Now that I think about it, he wouldn't have been grilled so hard in the first Congressional hearing if he was. He was in there scared shitless. Yeah some of them let him off easy, but the overall consensus wasn't that at all. That was made evident in the second meeting. Congress pretty much said "👉 you, the show goes on." What if he's been lobbying the SEC?? Explains why they have been sitting around not doing anything . They lose because A. BYE-DEN (#46) is replacing the head of the SEC really soon. Once that happens the game stops, no more "pay to play" and B. The SEC gets exposed for the massive corruption running through the ranks. The "black box" in the Austin office may have transaction records of people indivir' .. . getting paid off in the SEC.

I think this is bigger than just Kenny G though. Morgan Stanley is in on it too, why else would they need money so quickly? I think this black box in Austin has the unveiling's of historical levels of corruption. Many big banks involved, the sec, congressmen, governors etc. Citadel had the keys to an infinite money glitch, with the backing of other banks and government tolerance. This was until they fucked up and went all in on GameStop. It's almost poetic if you think about it.

Madoff was "the first prominent practitioner"[45] of payment for order flow, in which a dealer pays a broker for the right to execute a customer's order. This has been called a "legal kickback".[46] Some academics have questioned the ethics of these payments.[47][48] Madoff argued that these payments did not alter the price that the customer received.[49]

What I could guess from this: Researchers / Interns (possibly at UT) found a vulnerability in the trading system, reported this to their bosses, which capitalized on this (lab is sponsored by Shitadel) and are actively using these exploits to manipulate the markets?

This would explain lots of volume without price movements. This could be a glitch for creating synthetic shares?

Edit: Might be useful to look at some of the security research coming from those labs / papers published etc. This will not a smoking gun, but could reveal who/what are looking into potential vulnerabilities in these trading systems.

Is there a political thread also related to the stock selling tomfoolery last March/spring?

<https://www.dsc.org/news/report-timing-of-hedge-fund-billionaires-2-million-donation-to-pro-loeffler-super-pac-raises-conflict-of-interest-concerns/>

"A new Salon report reveals that Illinois "finance mogul" Ken Griffin donated "big chunks of cash" to a Super PAC supporting Loeffler and bankrolled by her husband, New York Stock Exchange Chairman Jeff Sprecher. Those donations included a massive $2 million contribution just days after news reports that Griffin's company was poised to make a major buyout that had required the NYSE's approval. Further complicating the conflict of interest is the fact that "Loeffler herself sits on a Senate committee that oversees Wall Street and the financial markets."...According to one securities law expert, "it's safe to assume that the donations are being made because Citadel stands to benefit by keeping her in office." On Oct. 9, billionaire Ken Griffin, the head of a multinational financial services company, gave $2 million to a super PAC called Georgia United Victory (GUV), which had originally been launched by allies of Georgia Gov. Brian Kemp but at the time exclusively supported Sen. Kelly Loeffler's election campaign...Griffin ranks among the richest people in America, and during the 2020 election cycle he spent at least $57 million to support conservative candidates, most of that on Republicans in tight U.S. Senate campaigns...Sen. Susan Collins of Maine, Sen. Cory Gardner of Colorado, Sen. Martha McSally of Arizona and Michigan GOP candidate John James, among others. But his $2 million to GUV on Oct. 9 was one of his 10 largest contributions ever, and he had already given the Loeffler-centric PAC $1 million about five weeks earlier."

Also IF this somehow has some link to all this (esp with Loeffler's husband) it also might point to the fact that Kenny G got fucked not only because of other factors like a quick vaccine creation/turnaround, DFV and retail, but also because HE DIDN'T EXPECT KELLY TO WIN THE SENATE SEAT

Madoff revolutionized PFOF. Citadel as a market maker can control the price through HFT. I'm assuming Citadel takes money directly from PFOF, deposits into account and never actually executes trade.

Then as people cash out, funds are withdrawn from account. The GameStop saga has thrown a wrench in a 5 year long Ponzi scheme and the mass exodus of clients out of Robinhood means the wells running dry.

Schrödinger's Stonk

You've taken what you learned and have adapted quite well.

What has changed since Madoff? Payment for order flow and apps like RobinHood. Robinhood (and the likes) are funneling all orders to Citadel. Once the orders arrive, Citadel can do whatever the hell they want with the data.

He Who Controls the Narrative Controls the People.

Citadel has a front-row seat to the narrative of the market via Payment for Order Flow and can make decisions ahead of the trade's execution. My take is that Citadel's entire business model is based on placing orders after analysing what they receive via PFOF.

As a software engineer I understand that it would require an enormous amount of computational power to analyse the PFOF data, make a decision, and then execute trades in real time, all based on the millions of transactions coming in via PFOF. The storage and computational power necessary to pull this off would require an entire data center to execute.

Here's the thing. This can all be proven by looking at the data in this data center. If they are indeed executing trades based on PFOF, then all evidence is sitting in that data center right now.

So here are some guesses from my side. BM's first fraud was based on PFOF, which is a big thing for Citadel as well. That is probably the pattern that is there. PFOF is basically just a ponzi scheme if the orders never hit the market.

https://www.reddit.com/r/wallstreetbets/comments/m9kh46/apes_i_think_i nailed_it_tldr_mado_ff_cut_his/?utm_medium=android_app&utm_source=share 2019 is right when DFV started digging into gme, the same year is mentioned here. But it got in fact bigger than both expected. Also both this post and DFV maintain that all is out in the open.

Then us apes are still on the wrong branches. I guess this refers to branches of Citadel. Maybe we havent looked at the Texas branch enough, yet.

Then from the talk about leverage, someone finding confidential data etc, it seem someone is blackmailing Citadel. Maybe someone got installed in a high position in one of the quiet branches, just to keep them quiet.

Then there is the talk about two mistakes. I really don't know what these two mistakes are. Maybe one is using the UT systems for communication, which led to the discovery of the data. But why should they do this? Why can't they use their own network? Different branches of citadel are firewalled from each other. Do they use UT to bypass their firewalling?

This has to be the most cryptic thing I have read in a long ass time. It's like he gave us all the answers but at the same time said "do your fuckin homework, I ain't taking the test for you." Bravo my good man, bravo.

So this is what we do know:

61727-054, is the inmate number of one Bernie Madoff.

xXx- an unknown entity be known as a legend on Wall st. The only people that come to mind here would be Bernie Madoff, Jordan Belfort and Martin Shkreli? Them being more infamous than anything. Idk what that has to do with xXx as they don't have 3 parts of their name. Idk. BUT going with the tone of OPs post, the game caught up to them some how, which happened to these 3. He also says they, meaning the xXx could be the name of the places where they worked? Madoff had Madoff investment securities LLC, Belfort had Stratton Oakmont, and Shkerli had Elia capital management. After typing all this out, I think they are completely unrelated. Idk what xXx stands for or who it could imply.

UT Austin was investigated for having ties to the Wuhan lab, that we all know was the origin of Covid. That brings "fuck covid" into the mix.

program with UTA.

Who are the frenimes though? There are a few banks on the same street so it's hard to say.

The SEC also just had a whistleblower. Was it one of the interns that worked at the UT office?
Idk.

I'm literally grasping at straws here off the top of my head, can someone help me connect the dots please??

126 Give Award Share Report Save

FarewellAndroid · 2m

There are multiple Austin references with 6th St, Congress Ave and possibly UT. Congress Ave has a lot of finance activity, quick Google maps search shows a lot of mortgage related firms as well as a big Wells Fargo building.

There was some DD back around January on wsb that showed through legit records/filings that Melvin and someone in charge of real estate at GameStop were connected. The theory was Melvin was insider trading using intel from the real estate guy and betting on bankruptcy. Possibly even using that guy to push Gme into bankruptcy from the inside.

I don't have access to my laptop but it would be worth digging for that wsb post. Maybe the citadel-Austin connection has to do with insider trading on info from GameStop's real estate affairs.

As for the Bernie Madoff connection, naked shorting a company into bankruptcy is basically a Ponzi scheme that you can run on banks instead of individuals...madoff only bilked 65B in his scheme and if Kenny is out to beat him banks are the perfect target.

Edit: just my own conjecture, not to be taken seriously!

IF A COMMENT DOESNT HAVE A HINT FROM OP, GO TRY ADDING TO THE COMMENTS THAT DO SO WE CAN CONNECT THE BREAD CRUMBS. 💎👉

Ok so this quote caught me first...

According to the U.S. Education Department, the UT system reported 10 contracts with Huawei and 24 contracts with Chinese state-owned universities between 2014 and 2019, totaling nearly $13 million.

And this one second...

According to a calculation by the office of U.S. Sen. John Cornyn, Texas' postsecondary institutions received roughly $1 billion in federal stimulus money through the CARES Act. Congress designated roughly $14 billion in federal relief money for higher education institutions nationwide.

The U.S. Department of Education stipulated that half of all federal money higher education institutions receive must go towards funding emergency grants for students dealing with coronavirus-related disruptions like housing displacement or job loss.

More than 25 percent of the $1 billion to Texas institutions went to the Texas A&M and University of Texas systems.

It continues from there showing how much was giving to some specific schools, but I must say....

If OP is onto something with this, my best bet is it would be connected to Texas receiving $1 billion of $14 billion in relief. This would be invalid if someone could prove that the amount is necessary based on a scalable solution of relief payments based on a metric li' or number of universities in a state is not an attempt to scare apes into selling, into changing brokers, into questioning their decision to like the stock. THIS STOCK.

This is not meant to invoke FearUncertaintyDoubt in the hearts and minds of any ape in this community. As for those who repeatedly attempt to tear you down pixel, warden, and others it is meant to serve as a notice that those tactics are simply just not going to be tolerated and ignored anymore.

Apes here in r/gme did not sign up for a lot of the shit that is continuously happening and flooding the community.

I wrote what I wrote in the manner I did because I didn't want to cause a panic, and if I have, I apologize and won't do anything of the sort going forward.

But beneath the layers is truth. Not conspiracy. Not a rabbit hole. Not an elaborate early April Fools. Truth. Those truths will apply pressure and not as an attempt by me or others here to act as a catalyst for a squeeze.

This is not a Ponzi scheme. I repeat for any ape The GME trade is NOT a ruse or an elaborate pump and dump by Ryan Cohen, u/DFV, u/rensole, others, or mods.

GME shareholders within this thread and around the world ARE NOT being taken advantage of for their life savings or spare change.

There are connections within my post that are real. I am not afraid of any personal repercussions that I may face as a result. Many of the facts and information within the comments that have been made by other apes is not of the QAnon sort nor should it be and if it leads some to that line of thinking I apologize, but it is of the sort that some do not want known or back traced for real reasons.

There is to my knowledge(thus far) no grand scheme to drive down the economy by robbing..er..crashing the market here or around the world and the GAMESTOP trade isn't the catalyst that would do so. It is however the non factored equation that will expose a lot about Citadel, their direct alliances, and their complicity in illegal activities.

I kept reading over and over the requests by apes for some ape or apes to point others in directions beyond DD, legalese, and forms so I decided to make my post less complicated and slightly more direct.

If it is better for the overall good of r/gme to treat what I wrote as purely fluff..I won't be mad at all.

Above all else, if nothing else, no matter what I say the only way is: Buy. 💎👉 Hold.

from bots, for plausible deniability, because the info was first gathered as insider knowledge but now public, so we have to find it ourselves etc. Or it could be complete nonsense, maybe pieced together from other posts. Citadel and BM have been linked on WSB before, because they both gained heavily from PFOF. Still nonsense might sometimes lead to open thinking in different directions. So it may be worth looking more into these similarities.

Still, I hope this sub doesn't become qanony. I believe there is a great overlap, because qanons also want to see the system collapse, but the conspiracy vibe is really bad.

It should be about your DD and beliefs, not because you think people have gone conspiracy. You have just highlighted why you're holding for the wrong reasons:

I hold because I believe in the company and the grand plan, and then as an added bonus I also believe a squeeze of some kind is possible. My holding has nothing to do with reddit, and reddit would never affect that decision of mine.

You: If people start getting weird, I'm selling (to paraphrase you). So you're not holding because you believe in the company, or believe the stock is going up, but you're actually holding because people are telling you to. And then you spit out your dummy and sell once you see something you don't like?

This should have nothing to do with reddit, so I hope if it does squeeze, the SEC/FED call people like you out on these comments, as a sign you are/have been manipulated by others. You should make your own decisions, period.

Real investors: No matter what you read, everything is telling you to buy and hold, but most importantly you're instincts. Don't listen to any others, who are likely trying to grab some virtual internet points :)

Edit: Every down vote confirms what I'm saying, because simply put, people don't like the truth.

Edit2: Apologies for the aggressive nature of the comment, in hindsight, it could and should have been nicer put

The biggest hint/accusation I've seen seems to be that transaction history contained on a server in Austin that is connected to Citadel (or possibly Morgan Stanley?) shows evidence of a ponzi scheme.

If true I sure hope whoever is posting under u/RatioAtBlessions account is also taking advantage of the SEC's (very well paying!) whistleblower account in addition to giving us Reddit apes this fun easter egg hunt, but yeah there's way too much weirdly specific info centered around Austin/UT that hasn't been talked about much if at all here on Reddit so far to consider it as a pure conspiracy theory IMO.

else by degrees of separation. I'm investigatively minded and there may be more to this than just fluff or wild speculation.

The theme seems to be Citadel is running low on funds and going to extreme fuckery to cover.

OP - is the implication that:

- Citadel is colluding with others to hide fraudulent transactions in their normal operations
- Madoff had legitimate brokerage arm of his firm (citation please), in addition to the Ponzi scheme. This made it harder to detect and gave it an air of legitimacy.
- Citadel is using their status as market maker to provide the same "legitimate" cover...
- ...but instead of a normal Ponzi scheme where disbursements which eat away at capital...
- Citadel has a more sophisticated scheme (albeit relatively structured) involving shorts, FTDs, and moving capital around to make their assets and positions appear larger than they materially are.
- OP is implying Ken made 2 mistakes: 1 in relation to Austin, TX; the other of a cyclical nature that a few apes have mentioned but haven't caught wider attention yet
- Moving operations to Austin (or having a datacenter there) is disadvantageous in the field of nanosecond trading; NYSE is a preferred base of operations...
- ...but the reason for moving to Texas might be one of the "tells" of the crime - less aggressive or knowledgeable prosecutors (NY has robust financial policing in place, TX less so; TX also has an AG under serious investigation for corruption), but under the guise of lower taxes.
- The cyclical crime is the meat of OP's comments however, and they imply that it's ongoing.
- Operations (especially ongoing ones) in finance need data centers, the kind that Citadel has in Austin.
- Several other competitors that are "in on the fix" have data centers in the same location...
- ...the kind of record keeping that you can't make go away. There is evidence there. Most likely evidence of some "original sin" (2019 per OP's post) - but also something related to ongoing cycles, a dead giveaway just like a Ponzi scheme has a dead giveaway in their portfolio or RoR.
- But for Citadel & co-conspirators, executing this scheme requires leverage and/or a base amount of cash for all parties to keep playing. But that leverage looks like it's drying up...

facts. rensol tbh nothin is facts facts. SI facts? everyday there is new SI calculation, is finra right? are those fAcTs? FTDs? are they real? where is the proof? everything is based on speculation. there are no facts. i mean ftds and naked shorting is aswell a conspiracy. sec dtcc rules ? connected to gme? who knows. everything is a big COnSpIrAcY.. as long as it is real... question: was 2008 a conspiracy? you know the answer.

as for the naked shorting and ftd's and everything I'd advise reading this:
<https://jacobslevycenter.wharton.upenn.edu/wp-content/uploads/2018/08/ETF-Short-Interest-and-Failures-to-Deliver.pdf>

This is a published thesis that shows how these can be used and they line up with the current methodology. the difference is I can cite papers, look at facts and know how to convey them, conspiracy theorists can't because then it wouldn't be a conspiracy theory.

Not Financial Advice. This sounds exactly like q-anon BS. Almost like it's created to:

-Make participants of /GME look like reality challenged conspiracy theory followers.

-Expend mental energy chasing down bizarre details that either "connect the dots" (from our perspective) because of an inherent need to see patterns, or don't because we haven't followed the trail enough.

-Increase the distrust between participants of /WSB, /GME, and the GME discord. The more fingerpointing / shill-calling, the less effective these mediums are.

Ultimately, what would you do even if this were all real and you followed every clue down every rabbit hole and came back with something you thought was incredibly incriminating? Call the SEC with what you found? Go back and re-read my first point.

I would tuck this away some place where it can't distract smooth-brains. When this is all over, if you remember this, you can come back and fact check it. Until then, my plan is to HODL.

wild idea.

as was found out weeks earlier - rh did not have all (or even any) gme shares in their account - but delegated the management of all shares (buy/sell) to their broker and only m

Chat

Search

that means broker can do pretty much everything unless my client is selling, and this could mean, that a lot of shares from rh (and maybe others) never hit the market in reality.

this could explain, why the buying of retail is not changing the price as expected. because all the buying is aggregated in a pool of a broker and only hits the market when the broker benefits from it.

if this is true the broker (or whoever) was able to „create“ shares himself, because there was only money involved.

if the marketprice is low - like it was for gme in december - this pretty much does not matter, because the involved money is not a lot - but if the price suddenly rises and a lot of people start to sell, they are getting issues because they need so much money they need to cough up, without having (not even naked) paper to sell on the market. so they need to „find“ this money through „investments“ - good explanation also, why rh got B$ as an investment in january and the broker sold a bond lately.

if they used all the (rh) money to short gme in real and got caught in a beartrap - it is the perfect moment, when the whole mechanism collapses. no gains on the market from their shorting activities and a gigantic amount of money to deliver, because people sold during the first „squeeze“.

market price would tend to go down, regardless of retail buying.

please kill my interpretation.

1)does Dun & Bradstreet have anything to do with this? Went down a mini rabbit hole and they're a worldwide data analytics company, 200 years old, with a global network in competition with the likes of "Axcess... Equifax, Experion..." xXX...?

EDIT: from google (a link to an investopedia article here:

<https://www.investopedia.com/terms/d/dandb.asp>)

Summary says: "Dun & Bradstreet is a corporation that offers information on commercial credit as well as reports on businesses. Most notably, Dun & Bradstreet is recognizable for its Data Universal Numbering System (DUNS numbers); these generate business information reports for more than 100 million companies around the globe."

Investopedia pages has a blip that in 2019 the company went private and the ticker (DNB) was retired.(ETA: BUT they are still actively traded- located the ticker with stock prices ranging from a low of $21.86 on Feb 26, 2021, to a high of $28.16 back in October of 2020.

Maybe I'm in the wrong rabbit hole and reaching for air.

EDIT: 2) OR does the treed and bushes line point to deregulation that occurred during Bush's administration and bank bailouts after the crash in '08?

3) Does that line have to do it the Buttonwood Agreement (the founding document of the NYSE)
Reference: https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Buttonwood_Agreement Damn how am I supposed to work now?

Okay last try

Citadel & Co HAVE GME stonks. When someone buys (now) through any broker all that uses them, they give them their own personal share so the price doesn't move. The stock moves, but technically no volume and no "buy" is made. But when someone sells, they actually take that stock away from you and pocket it while creating a dark pool transaction for the sale (?) However they underestimated that there would be much more buys than they had available, thus the phantom stonks come into play or some shit idek anymore

Fluff. haha.

So Ken borrows say ten shares from ten places, sells them, writes counterfeit replacements (like ious from dumb and dumber) then buys a real share, covers the first iou with real share, then reborrows it to do the same with the next nine guys. Ponzi style. Except all this shit has to cycle on the system so we get a glitch in plain sight?

Looking into the books plain sight.

There's something in the finances that comes up on a regular base and doesn't need to be reported next time around. Have not much insight into american accounting... But it might be that something is accounted the one year for money going off , is accounted for money going in the next time around.

So like a "legal" way to hide some reeeal fuckery.

I feel it is something like: Buying something reaaaally expensive like... real estate (for business? with the help of someone else so that no real money has to be transferred) , account for it... and the next time around they just sell it lower/higher depending on their needs (for tax reasons?) and can account it a second time. While no real money was involved (might be something like ; you scratch my back, I'll scratch yours.) there is still a glitched sum that frees money (or binds money) to work with!

Edit:

There could be some transfers to overseas corporation parts or partners that are hidden in plain sight.

Backup-Portfolios and openly hidden transfers

So if the corruption this post is alluding too is correct....there is no reason that Citadel didn't go 10,000% all in on GME crashing. In Citadels eyes it was a sure thing...the highest execs in GME were Citadels people. Why wouldn't they manufacture 525 million synthetic shares like someone screenshot in a dark pool. If this is true...holy fuck this could truly be a never ending squeeze. I am almost sick to my stomach this level of corruption actually exists.

I'm curious if any of this has to do with the bizarre numbers of low-share-count high-frequency trades we've seen (1,000s of bids/asks going by with the same share count such as 5, 6, 7...18, 19, 20) and if they tie in to the "glitch" preceding these days with the large "volume" at end of day.

I can't tie it in to the OP post, other than it would make sense for high speed trading such as this to be easier to obscure and execute with physical distance modified possibly? (Texas rather than NY area etc)?

I think there are a few possibilities as to what OP is doing here.

1. OP is someone with inside knowledge who wants Ken Griffin taken down, but does not want to dox themselves.
2. OP is a shill trying to get us to focus our attention on irrelevant things.
3. OP is just having some harmless fun to keep them and us entertained, but ultimately doesn't really know much more than anyone else about what's going on.

/u/RatioAtBlessions care to post any clues as to which one it is? I don't think it's 2 because I can't see how this would benefit the shorts. I wouldn't mind if it was 3 because this is fun, but I'm hoping it's 1.

4 Share Tip

GMEToTheMooooooooon · 2m

I also looked at their comment history. It's also possible that OP has contact with an insider who is using their account. r/GME doesn't allow posts from new accounts and maybe the person commenting here doesn't have an account or has an account that identifies them. I wouldn't read too much into the "Fluff" tag. without much second thought from the public. I.e. "Oh yeah, they were brick and mortar, they never stood a chance. Hey honey, remember Gamestop? Yeah... Me too."

This would tie in the the possible allusion to insider plants of C suite positions, to oversee the failure and communicate with the "opposition".

Possibly the lax security measures of online access, but if going that route, more likely just the fact that so much is done remotely that it's easier for snooping through files when you're in someones server than in their office (particularly if you've been there before).

Anything beyond that seems like looking for a zebra rather than a horse when you hear hoofbeats in Texas.
